Crawfish Processors to Get Tariff Funds

Some Louisiana crawfish processors stand to collectively receive $2,198,146 in funds from tariffs on Chinese crawfish tailmeat collected by the U.S. Customs Service this year, Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom said.

"It's a nice Christmas present for the processors, but unfortunately, it's a lot less than what should have been collected," Odom said. "The amount is definitely a let down from what they've received in the past, and I've been told that uncollected duties total more than $32 million this year."

In recent years, the processors, who filed an anti-dumping petition against the Chinese in 1996, have been eligible for amounts ranging from $7.4 million to $9 million. Crawfish producers do not receive any of the funds collected by Customs, another factor that disappoints Odom.

"I don't want to complain about our processors getting money from the tariffs. I'm glad to see them getting anything, but I do think something needs to be done so the full $32 million that is owed gets collected. I'd also like to see the crawfish producers get some benefit from the funds," Odom said. "Think about what that could do for the industry and the suffering economy in Louisiana. The hurricanes waylaid the seafood industry across the Gulf Coast - $32 million could really make a difference."

In total, more than $317 million in Chinese crawfish tariffs have gone uncollected.

Louisiana crawfish processors receive the money as a result of the Byrd Amendment, which says anti-dumping petitioners are to receive funds collected by Customs for their industry. Now the Byrd Amendment is being threatened in Congress.

A measure to abolish the amendment is attached to a bill, recently passed by the House of Representatives, that cuts federal spending. The Senate version of the spending reduction does not eliminate the Byrd Amendment, also known by its proper name, the Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act (CDSOA).

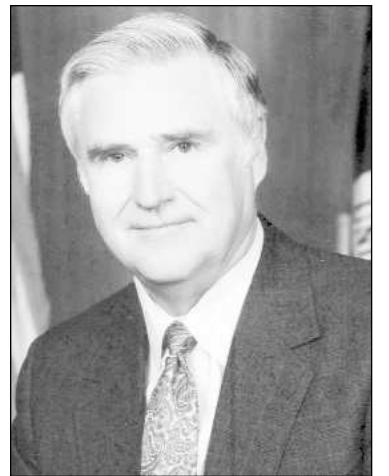

"We fought long and hard to get the tariffs in place, and the money collected rightfully belongs to the industry," Odom said. "The crawfish processors have basically been put out of business by importers who illegally dumped their product into the market. Without processors, the crawfish producers and fishermen lose another market for their live crawfish. Even with the tariffs, which often go uncollected or the importers find a loophole to dodge them, the industry is struggling. I can't believe Congress would even consider taking this away."

Odom said he hopes Congress will not only preserve the current Byrd Amendment, but even consider expanding it to include crawfish farmers, not just processors.

Odom said roughly 27 processors in the state would benefit from the funds collected in 2005. There were more than 100 crawfish processors in Louisiana until the early 1990s when Chinese crawfish imports were dumped into the market.

In 1996, Louisiana crawfish processors filed an anti-dumping petition with the U.S. International

Maine plans trade mission

Maine Governor John Baldacci is planning to join a trade mission to Cuba in an attempt to improve relations with the country.

Maine's Legislature passed a resolution in 2002 to lift a trade embargo and normalize relations with Cuba. The U.S. embargo limits travel and trade with Cuba, but food and agricultural products can be sold to the country on a cash-only basis under an exception created in 2000.

A year ago, a preliminary $10 million export agreement was signed by Robert Spear, then Maine's agriculture commissioner, and Pedro Alvarez Borrego, head of the Cuban import agency Alimport.

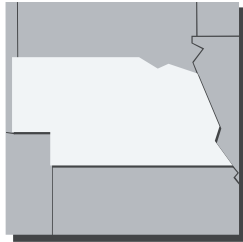

Some contracts under that agreement have already been executed, including one that exported Maine cows to Cuba.

Other producers, including seed potatoes and apples, are looking to complete deals during the upcoming trade mission, said Doyle Marchant, president of Cedar Spring Agricultural Co. and mission coordinator. Other potential contracts could benefit growers of tablestock potatoes, frozen fish, sardines, lumber, alpaca wool, pasta and dairy cattle, said Marchant.

"The Cubans are clearly looking to turn trade of agricultural products (into) an opportunity to open relations with the United States," said Marchant.

Representatives of the lumber, potato, biotech, seafood, wholesale grocery and cattle industries will participate. The mission is mostly financed by private funds.

Reality show concerns farm leader

We're not hayseeds, says a Nebraska farm leader, worried about how accurately a new TV reality show will portray farmers and their problems.

John Hansen, the president of the Nebraska Farmers Union fears that

The Farmer Wants a Wife intends to turn its rural reality cast into media fodder as naive bumpkins.

"I'm not inclined to be helpful to any of those efforts that would trivialize the enormous problems that farm and ranch families face," he said.

The premise of the show is to make a match between lonely young farmers with no time to date and women who dream of living a traditional, small-town lifestyle.

The show is from FremantleMedia, which also produces American Idol, the upcoming American Inventor, The Price is Right and Love on the Rocks.

Producer Julie Uribe, a graduate of the University of Nebraska, said she's determined to search her home state for farmers who will star in the show.

"I wanted to help somebody from my home state get the opportunity of a lifetime," Uribe said. "I made sure we sent our casting team to Nebraska."

The casting team has also tapped California, Ohio and Texas.

"We're looking for all types of farmers, not just the country bumpkin," said casting director Deborah Tarica.

Hansen said producers called him for a list of potential candidates, but he declined the request because of prior commitments.

Several years ago, Hansen said, he worked to keep a reality show that would send an Appalachian family to Beverly Hills off the air. He felt it would negatively portray rural residents.

He said he likes the romance angle of the Farmer Wants a Wife show, but wonders how agriculture would be represented on the show. And he's also worried about how Americans perceive family farmers and ranchers because of how they are portrayed in the popular media.

"It's somewhere between rednecks and Hee Haw: culturally backward and unwashed," he said. "It's kind of the new and more modern version of the hayseed. It's such a shallow, inaccurate and stereotypical view of rural families."

FremantleMedia has launched The Farmer Wants a Wife in the United Kingdom, Netherlands, Belgium, France and Norway. In the Netherlands, the program is the highest rated show of 2005, according to FremantleMedia.
